He keeps us running

And I keep myself running, too. Running is a sport that my wife introduced me to and since then, I've run in the Boston and New York Marathons among others. Running isn't for everyone but I really enjoy it.

For the Town of Windsor, "running" takes on a new meaning. That means our town's computer systems, printers, networks, email, Internet access and even the mobile data terminals in the Windsor Police Department's cruisers are all running just as they should. When everything is running then no one knows we are even there. In fact, everyone's happy when they don't need to see us.

But keeping everything running is almost as demanding as running a marathon. The technology we use keeps evolving and we spend a lot of time making sure that Windsor's Data Center is taking advantage of new technologies and that the town's websites are as useful and customer friendly as possible. There are also many threats to our network and it's up to us to defend against every one of them, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Here in IT, our job is to make sure that the technology keeps running. It's more than a marathon because it never ends but, like recreational running, we love to do it.
